

Foxes in your neighbourhood | novascotia.ca

3-4 minutes

Red Foxes are widely distributed across North America and are native to Nova Scotia. They are very curious by nature and successfully inhabit both rural and urban areas. They prefer wild foods like insects, wild fruit, small birds, eggs, and small mammals, such as mice and voles. Hungry foxes will scavenge for food wherever they can find it, including residential or developed areas associated with people. As a result, foxes will become comfortable living within sight of people. Sources of food may include unsecured garbage, pet foods, fallen fruit, compost, spillage from
